Miss Motley To Be Lent's First Bride

Marriage Ceremony to Take Place Saturday, and This Evening a Dinner Will Be Given Her by Her Parents

Unusual Gayety Ahead

Mi-Careme, With Its Round of Charity Affairs, Will Keep Society Folk Busy

Thee was a brief respite in the social whirl yesterday, for Ash Wednesday is always a blank in the social calendar. The curtain, which was rung down Shrove Tuesday on frivolities, will be raised again to-day, for Lent promises to be unusually gay this year, with not only dances and the usual dinner parties, but a number of weddings as well and Mi-Careme already has been selected for a number of large entertainments for charity. Lent's first bride, Miss Kathryn Thornton Motley, who will be married Saturday, to Matthew Comstock Jenkins, will have a dinner given for her this evening by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thornton Niven Motley, of 375 Park Avenue. The guests will include the bridesmaids, best man and ushers. The wedding will take place in the chantry of St. Thomas's Church and will be followed by a reception at the Plaza. calendar. The curtain, which was Another dinner this evening will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Frank K. Sturgis, at their home, 17 East Sixty-arst Street.

The Thursday Evening Club will meet to-night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Church Osborn, 40 East Thirty-sixth Street. The entertain-ment will be followed by the usual huffat support

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Winifred Jarvis, of 236 West Seventy-seventh Street, to Lieutenant John Wilkes, U. S. N. Lieutenant Wilkes comes of a naval family, for he is a son of Captain J. E. Wilkes, of Charlotte, N. C., and grandson of the late John Wilkes, who was a member of the first class that has graduated from Annapolis in 1840. Miss Jarvis's fiance was graduated from the Academy in 1916. During the war he was engaged in the transport service and is now on submarine duty in Southern waters. No date has been set for the wedding, which will take place at the navy yard which will take place at the navy yard in Pensacola, Fla., in Lieutenant Broad-ort's home.

Gold Medal Is Given Hoover By Civic Forum Token Designed to Reward Most Distinguished Public Service Presented by Charles Evans Hughes Called "Man of the Hour" Recipient, Embarrassed Under Broad Compliments, Gives Credit to Helpers ance. His achievements dignified the nation and established prestige for the American name abroad which none of the failures of diplomacy can obscure. He bears a name illustrious because of remarkable achievements; but, best of all, it is a name untarnished, expressive not only of exceptional ability but of the simple life of a modest citizen." Mr. Hoover betrayed his embarrassment under the praise of Mr. Hughes and other speakers by sitting with downcast eyes, folding and unfolding a bit of paper. In accepting the medal he said: "I am indeed grateful for this distinguished honor and overwhelmed with these expressions of praise. I can only receive the medal with the feeling that it is a tribute to that great branch of the voluntary service given by the American people, of which I happened to be an instrument. It was really by the merest thrust of circumstance that I should have had this position in the war. Success Due to Teamwork Miss Margaret Steward

The New York Civic Forum presented a gold medal to Herbert C. Hoover last night at Carnegie Hall. The award was made to him as the American who has performed the most distinguished public service in the last two years. Previous awards of the medal have gone to Alexander Graham Bell, General George Goethals and Thomas A. Edison.

Charles Evans Hughes, in making the presentation, said:

"We have met to pay a deserved tribute to an American of rare distinction. The nature of the tribute is in itself most unusual. It is our happy privilege to express our appreciation of the service of a living personality, one who is with us in the vigor of middle life rich in the promise of future usefulness.

"When the ruthless invasion of Belgium at the outbreak of the war created an unparalleled exigency there was one man in Europe who had tealent, the experience, the character and the enterprise to meet the emergency, and that man was Herbert Hoover. It is to the lasting honor of our country that this man, born and trained to meet this crisis, was an American. His whole performance, in its alertness, its speed, its adequacy, was typically American. He had the complete confidence of foreign governments, who intrusted to him vast sums without audit or supervision of expenditure.

World Admired Efficiency

"His administration of relief on this colossal scale for the benefit of the people of Belgium was conducted not only without reproach but with such efficiency that it challenged the admiration of the world. For years millions found their daily sustenance only through his organized administration. Long before America realized her duty in the great struggle she was profoundly gratified that in the Jerson of Hoover her 'humane sentiment was finding expression in an organization of unsurpassed effectiveness for the relief of Belgium.

"Hoover, as administrator of relief, was at once financier, diplomat and statesman. He came into contact with the governments of the Allies and with the despotism of the Central Powers At all points he was ready, equipped, firm, fearless and adequate.

"When we entered the war it soon became apparent that back of the organization of man power must be the organization of equipment and supplies, and back of these the correlation, development and control of the food resources of the country. There was but one man in sight for this most difficult of undertakings, and that man was Hoover. It would have been impossible for any human being, or any conceivable group, to have handled this gigantic undertakings, and that man was Hoover. It would have been impossible for any human being, or any conceivable group, to have handled this gigantic undertakings, and the stisfaction of every one. But no one doubted that to that task Hoover brought the best ability anywhere available.

Anyway that is how it seems. It all depends on your state of mind. If it happens to be a minute of pleasure it passes so quickly that you are quite sure that at least fifty of those seconds were crowded out somehow. But if it is a minute of dreadful anxiety it seems so long that you wonder if it ever will end.

That was the kind of a minute during which Peter Rabbit waited to see what Reddy Fox would do next. Of course it really was no longer than any other minute, but to Peter it seemed—well, it seemed half a lifetime. It did, really. You see Peter, sitting right in the middle of a little open space where the snow had melted from the brown grass, knew that if Reddy Fox kept coming as he was headed it would not take him more than a minute to reach that little open space, and then—well, Peter tried not to think of what might happen then.

If only Reddy would turn his head! Then Peter might have a chance to crawl to that big bunch of brown grass just a little way from him and hide under it. That seemed to Peter absolutely his only chance of escape. So he kept his eyes fixed on Reddy, hoping and hoping that Reddy would look another way and give him just this one small chance. He knew that Reddy hadn't seen him yet. That seemed funny, because, you know, Peter was out in plain sight in the very middle of that little open space. But Peter than to his eyes and his sharp cars trusted to his eyes and his sharp cars. At the very edge of the little open space achieved under than to his nose.

At the very edge of the little open space achance to crawly indides and his long hindlegs gathered under him ready to jump with all his might the instant Reddy should discover him. How Peter did wish he was nicely hidden under that clump of grass. And right then something happened that made Peter glad he wasn't hidden there. Reddy turned and walked straight over to that clump of grass and carefully smelled under and around it!

Winifred Lugrin Fahey, a soprano from Winnipeg, gave a recital yesterday afternoon at Aeolian Hall. She disclosed a voice of a good deal of power and body in the medium and lower registers, but the upper notes were strident and forced. In Haydn's "With Verdure Clad," and Mendelssohn's "Hark Ye, Israel," she displayed some knowledge of the oratorio style, but insufficient breath support badly marred her phrasing.

This was perhaps due to nervousness, for she improved in the next group, in Bishop's "Tell Me Thy Heart," and in Schubert's "Peace" and "Hark, Hark, the Lark."

She was accompanied at the piano by Claude Gottheif, and at the organ by Ward Stephens. Winifred Lugrin Fahey, a soprano
